12noon – 12.45pm	Opening Keynote – Sir Ian Taylor Ian's story mirrors New Zealand's growth from its days as an agriculture-based economy. He laboured in the freezing works during the school holidays. Through the swinging 60s and 70s he was a singer in a rock and roll band, before being called up in the army. By 1980, he had completed a law degree and started an entirely new career in television, where he was part of an industry that went from black-and-white film to colour video and on into the digital age. If anyone can tell us about looking forward – it's Sir Ian Taylor
12.45pm – 1.30pm	Lunch
1.30pm – 2.15pm	Wayne Middleton, Global Vice President, Risk Momentus Technologies Polycrisis – Another jargon term or the state of the future as we know it? With expanding tensions in Ukraine and the Pacific, and a growing body of evidence of the climate challenge the world is facing, we are increasingly seeing the interconnectivity of severe global events affecting us all. Polycrisis is the term used to represent the present and future interconnected global risks we are experiencing, with compounding effects that are greater than the sum of each part. As our operating environment becomes more complex, risk management in venues must shift from just health and safety, to one of decision-making in an uncertain world.
